Transformational Journeys

The Good, the Bad and the Ugly

About Sevasti Wong

Sevasti Wong
Global Transformational Change Lead, Accenture

Sevasti is one of Accenture's most senior transformational change leaders. Having served clients for over 25 years, she has recently taken on her most challenging client assignment – leading change on Accenture's own reinvention journey. To do so, Sevasti has launched Accenture's Transformational Change Hub, responsible for architecting and overseeing the change required to activate Accenture's strategy for circa 800K people in over 50 countries.

Delivering purpose, strategy and value at speed and scale requires an integrated approach and Sevasti brings deep experience and expertise across the full change lifecycle, always activating for results and the fastest path to value. From preparing leaders to lead in new ways, designing future-ready operating models, helping organisations access and create talent, and most importantly, leading and delivering continuous change.

Sevasti has a deep interest in how people think, their motivations and the opportunity that lies as we accelerate the reinvention of work and the reshaping of workforces in the era of AI, GenAI and agentic architecture, to further unlock the potential of people, their teams and the organisation.

Good people, good work, good organisations matter and this is at the heart of the work Sevasti leads, focusing on how to coach leaders to build and unlock talent so people can adopt new ways of working quickly, and organisations can build workplaces where people love to work whilst transforming faster.

Sevasti has won numerous awards including being named as the UK's Businesswoman of the Year in 2015, as part of the Asian Women of Achievement Awards, and Accenture's Inspirational Leader of the Year in 2011. She also holds over 20 CRM patents with the US Patent Office.
